Dr. BABASAHEB AMBEDKAR WRITINGS AND SPEECHES

AMENDING CONSTITUTION

This tampering with the Constitution from time to time is a bad thing. I said so last time but I don't suppose the Government has cared to pay any heed. I would like to repeat the same caution again and I should like to give some reasons why the Constitution should not be amended and tampered so easily. Anyone who is familiar with what is called the interpretation of law by courts – and there are well-set rules as to how Statutes are to be interpreted – will recall that there is a famous rule of interpretation which is called Stare decisis which means this, that when the courts have given an interpretation for a long number of years some lawyer gets up and convinces the court that the existing interpretation is wrong and ought to be changed, the courts say that they shall not do it, although they are convinced that the interpretation is wrong.

People know that the Constitution contains certain rules, certain obligations, and in accordance with them, they make their contracts, they make their plans for the future. It is not right, therefore, to come in every year and to disturb these values. That is the reason why I say the Constitution should not be so lightly and so frequently amended. I do not know whether the Government would listen to it, perhaps not.
